Building Relationships and Communicating with Parents of Students in Mixed Ability Classrooms: Making it Work!

■ In this session, a secondary math teacher who has a background in business will share how he has successfully applied a collaborative client perspective from the private sector to building relationships with parents. His premise is that education is a service business similar to other service businesses, but educators do not frequently get an opportunity to learn from other service businesses. Come hear his ideas about keeping expectations for students high, while ensuring parents are enabled to play a better support role in their child's education.

Presenter: Thomas Greco, teacher, Kinnelon High School
